- 4. A soldier did not receive a leave during his two-year enlistment, except in cases of soldiers who excelled in all phases of training, and this leave had to be approved by the regimental commander. There were only two types of passes. One was a 24-hour pass that lasted from 1200 of one day to 1200 of the following day. The other covered the period from 1800 of the first day to 1600 of the second. To earn such passes, a soldier had to excel in all phases of training.
- 5. The morale of the enlisted man was very low during maneuvers because of the five months spent out in the field without any leaves or passes. Soldiers going anywhere as a group had to be accompanied by an officer. If a company went to the theater it had to be escorted by one of the company officers. Officers were granted a two day pass every six weeks while on maneuvers.
